Among the masters of this art form stands Peter Mrhar, a renowned photographer whose cyanotypes have garnered international acclaim for their exquisite craftsmanship and profound artistic vision. Cyanotype Peter Mrhar, a comprehensive monograph published by Thames & Hudson, invites readers on an extraordinary journey into the world of this extraordinary artist.

The Visionary Artist Behind the Cyanotypes

Born in 1963 in Slovenia, Peter Mrhar's artistic path was forged at an early age. His passion for photography ignited during his childhood, and he went on to study the art form at the Academy of Fine Arts in Ljubljana.

Throughout his career, Mrhar has delved into various photographic techniques, but it was the cyanotype process that truly captured his imagination. The simplicity and elegance of this method resonated with his artistic sensibilities, allowing him to explore the transformative power of light and shadow.

The Cyanotype Process: A Timeless Technique

The cyanotype process emerged in the mid-19th century as a means of creating low-cost copies of architectural drawings. However, artists soon recognized its aesthetic potential, employing it to create unique and expressive works of art.

To create a cyanotype, Mrhar coats watercolor paper with a light-sensitive solution made from ferric ammonium citrate and potassium ferricyanide. When exposed to ultraviolet light, this solution darkens, creating a permanent print in shades of cyan blue.

The Promise of Permanence: Cyanotypes as Works of Art

One of the remarkable qualities of cyanotypes is their exceptional longevity. Unlike traditional silver-based photographs, which can deteriorate over time, cyanotypes are highly resistant to fading and discoloration.

This enduring quality has made cyanotypes a sought-after medium for both artists and collectors. Mrhar's cyanotypes, with their pristine colors and meticulous attention to detail, are testament to the permanence and beauty of this timeless art form.

Exploring Themes of Nature, Light, and the Human Form

In his cyanotypes, Peter Mrhar explores a diverse range of themes, from the grandeur of nature to the complexities of the human form. His work often captures the ephemeral and poetic moments often overlooked by the human eye.

Through his cyanotypes, Mrhar celebrates the beauty of the natural world, capturing the textures of leaves, the movement of water, and the ethereal expanse of the sky. His human subjects are depicted with sensitivity and intimacy, revealing the inner emotions and vulnerabilities that connect us all.
