Patient Confidentiality

Patient confidentiality is one of the most important ethical and legal obligations of nurses. Nurses are required to keep all patient information confidential, including their medical history, diagnosis, treatment, and prognosis.

There are a few exceptions to the rule of patient confidentiality. For example, nurses may be required to disclose patient information to law enforcement or to protect the public health.

Informed Consent

Informed consent is the process of obtaining a patient's permission to perform a medical procedure or treatment. In order to obtain informed consent, the nurse must provide the patient with information about the procedure or treatment, including the risks and benefits.

The patient must be able to understand the information and make a voluntary decision about whether or not to consent to the procedure or treatment.

Negligence

Negligence is a legal concept that refers to the failure to exercise reasonable care. In the context of nursing, negligence can occur when a nurse fails to follow proper procedures or takes actions that harm a patient.

Nurses can be held liable for negligence if they cause harm to a patient due to their own carelessness or recklessness.

In addition to the information provided in this guidebook, nurses should also consult with an attorney to get specific legal advice about their practice.
