In this groundbreaking book, bestselling author and pastor John Piper examines the roles of men and women in the church, drawing on Scripture to provide a clear and compelling vision for how men and women can work together to fulfill God's purposes.

Piper begins by exploring the biblical foundations for the roles of men and women. He shows that God created men and women with distinct roles, but that these roles are complementary, not competitive. Men are called to be leaders and protectors, while women are called to be helpers and nurturers. Together, men and women can create a healthy and vibrant church that reflects the image of God.

Piper then applies these biblical principles to the practical realities of church life. He discusses the roles of men and women in worship, teaching, leadership, and ministry. He also addresses the controversial issue of women in pastoral ministry, providing a balanced and biblical perspective.

Through his careful exegesis of Scripture and his deep understanding of the human condition, Piper provides a much-needed guide to the roles of men and women in the church. This book will help readers to understand

God's design for men and women, and to live out their roles with faithfulness and joy.
